2008 General Election Results

Results as of November 5 at 9:14am

The message couldn't be clearer: nationally, voters wanted progressive change. They elected an outstanding progressive as the 44th president. They put Democrats solidly in control of the Congress– that included Arizona's Democratic Congressional victories, with 5 out of our 8 seats going Democratic.

However, it was a bittersweet victory. The voters for AZ state Leg. seats seem to have gone the opposite, with the Republicans seeming to win more seats. This may pan out differently in the end as provisional, early, and overseas ballots are counted. Hard to give a summary until all ballots are counted, which means that this hand-out is only a first look at the results, and should not be used as the final count.

SCHOOL UNIFICATION

Voters approved merging Tolleson Union High School District with its five elementary districts. Tolleson Union will be combined with Fowler, Littleton, Pendergast, Tolleson and Union elementary districts, creating a 30,314-student district.

Five other unification plans were headed towards defeat in Phoenix, Glendale, Tempe. Voters in Glendale Elementary and Washington Elementary also were rejecting plans to unify their districts with Glendale Union, creating a 51,000-student district. Voters in Kyrene were overwhelmingly opposed to a plan to merge with Tempe Union High School District and Tempe Elementary School District. A plan called for Agua Fria Union High School District to join with Avondale and Litchfield elementary districts into a 19,437-student district. The other plan that was expected to be rejected was Buckeye Union High School District uniting with Arlington, Buckeye, Liberty and Palo Verde elementary districts into an 8,034-student.

Voters appeared to reject a plan to unite Phoenix Union High School District with its 13 feeder elementary districts to create a district with more than 116,000 students. The districts are Alhambra, Balsz, Cartwright, Creighton, Isaac, Laveen, Madison, Murphy, Osborn, Phoenix Elementary, Riverside, Roosevelt, and Wilson. Madison voters overwhelmingly appeared to have said no to unification.
